We need your support

Australian Peacekeepers have a strong history of making a positive, practical difference in the lives of people affected by conflict and it is now our time to show our support. Our aim is to unveil the Memorial on ANZAC Parade on Australia's 65th Peacekeeping Anniversary – 14th September 2012.

This cannot happen unless sufficient funds can be raised for its construction.

You can become a part of Australian peacekeeping history today! Complete the form and join as a "Mate of Australian Peacekeeping Memorial" or call (02) 6215 4203 to donate to the construction of this Memorial.

AUSTRALIAN PEACEKEEPING MEMORIAL

Commemorating Australian Peacekeeping
Past, Present and Future.

A Memorial symbolising honour and sacrifice

Australian military, police and civilians have been undertaking peace operations for over 60 years. We were part of the first ever deployment for peacekeeping to the Dutch East Indies in 1947. Since then, over 90,000 Australians have been deployed in more than 60 peacekeeping missions around the world.

Many of our peacekeepers have served on multiple missions, and in the case of our reserve soldiers often in different roles as police, civilians and military. Unfortunately, some have been killed on these operations and many have been injured and traumatised.

Representing the commitment and sacrifice of past, present and future peacekeepers, the Australian Peacekeeping Memorial will be a living memorial on ANZAC Parade. This will be the first Australian National Peacekeeping Memorial.

It is a story that needs to be told

When constructed, the Australian Peacekeeping Memorial will honour the sacrifice of Australian Peacekeepers in the service of international peace and security.

- It will acknowledge the deaths and casualties suffered by Australian Peacekeepers while deployed on operations.
- It will recognise the critical contributions by Australian military, police and civilians to peacekeeping operations which are commanded or authorised by the United Nations, or are sanctioned by the Australian Government.
- It will be a reminder of the difficulties and dangers international peacekeepers often face in remote and isolated regions, where infrastructure is destroyed and peace is at best fragile.
- It will acknowledge the skills, professionalism, resourcefulness and courage required of individuals in such circumstances, the often horrific humanitarian crises and human rights abuses they must confront and the long term emotional and physiological impact these experiences can have on individuals.
- It will also reflect awareness of the support and sacrifice given by families of Peacekeepers.

Who we are

In 2006, a voluntary Committee of peacekeeping veterans was formed to oversee this project. The Committee includes representatives from the following organisations:

- Australian Defence Force (ADF)
- Australian Federal Police (AFP)
- United Nations Association of Australia (UNAA)
- United Nations Police Association of Australia (UNPAA)
- Australian Peacekeepers and Peacemakers Veterans Association (APPVA)
- National Headquarters of the Returned and Services League (RSL)

We have the design

The Australian Peacekeeping Memorial design is outstanding. The Memorial will be a high quality, enduring landmark. The design encompasses a glowing passage of light that is the powerful entry for the Memorial. The passage is between two massive monoliths, raised slightly off the ground in a stone courtyard. The lit interior will have a striking presence on ANZAC Parade both by day and night, evoking the Australian Peacekeepers' role and their help to local populations.

It is a proud Memorial, signifying courage, strength and honour. A Memorial that truly embodies Australia's peacekeeping values.

We have the site

The Canberra National Memorials Committee has approved a site for the Memorial on ANZAC Parade in Canberra. The Memorial commemorating the courage, sacrifice, service and valour of Australian Peacekeepers will be in the same spirit as in other Memorials on ANZAC Parade.

The Memorial will be a focal point for national parades and remembrance ceremonies in recognition of Australian peacekeeping on appropriate occasions such as ANZAC day (25th April), UN International Day of Peacekeepers (25th May), Australian Peacekeepers' and Peacemakers' Day (14th September), and United Nations Day (24th October).

Yes, I want to help honour our Australian Peacekeepers by joining as a "Mate of the Australian Peacekeeping Memorial"
